What is Green Steel?

Green steel refers to steel produced using low-carbon and sustainable methods, significantly reducing or eliminating reliance on fossil fuels during manufacturing. Traditional steel production uses coal-based blast furnaces, where burning coke (derived from coal) reduces iron ore into iron, emitting large amounts of CO₂—about 1.9 to 2.3 tonnes of CO₂ per tonne of steel. In contrast, green steel uses eco-friendly alternatives like green hydrogen (produced from renewable energy), electricity-driven furnaces, or recycled scrap steel in Electric Arc Furnaces (EAF), producing much lower emissions.

Contribution of Green Steel in World Production:

Today, the majority of global steel (~70%+) is produced using carbon-intensive methods, with green steel representing a minor share of total output.

However, green steel capacity is expanding, supported by hydrogen-based technologies, EAF expansion, and decarbonisation commitments, with projections suggesting up to ~20% of steel production could be low-emission by 2035.

Importance of Green Steel Production and Its Significance in India

Green steel production is increasingly important for India as the country works toward its 2070 net-zero goal and seeks to reduce emissions from its highly carbon-intensive steel sector. By shifting to hydrogen-based technologies, renewable energy, and low-carbon processes, India can cut its industrial emissions while securing long-term export competitiveness, especially under global carbon regulations like the EU's CBAM. Green steel also reduces dependence on imported coking coal, strengthens energy security, attracts ESG-focused investments, and supports the growing domestic demand for sustainable infrastructure. Overall, it positions India's steel industry for cleaner growth and global leadership in low-carbon manufacturing.

Against this backdrop and to sensitize the local manufacturing industry and German/European machine, plant components. Systems manufacturers, VDMA India together with ISR info media will organise first International symposium on Green Steel - Green Steel: Powering the Low-Carbon Industrial Revolution at Bhubaneswar on 28th May 2026.

Key issues:

- Pathways to Decarbonising India's Steel Sector
- Policy and Regulatory Framework for Green Steel
- Role of Green Hydrogen in Steelmaking
- Technology Readiness and Industrial Transformation
- Scrap Availability and Circular Economy
- Export Potential for India's Green Steel
- CBAM and Global Trade Competitiveness

The seminar will have impotent Stakeholders:

- Policy makers
- Senior management from the all the major steel producers
- Senior representatives from Energy and Power sector
- Technology Suppliers
- Reputed Consultants/
- Research Institutions & Academia

Registration:

Deadline for Registration 10 May 2026
